Spotlight on: New accomplishments in breast cancer prevention

Too toxic, too untargeted, too difficult to prove. In this egrandround, Andrea DeCensi, outlines the many promising developments in chemoprevention that are beginning to challenge the sceptics.

What do you think?

Should every cancer service be providing a network of prevention units for routine referral of people deemed to be at high risk?
Is it still too early to assess the value of prevention services?

You can read the full article in Cancer World.