

The European Institute of Women's Health organised a Roundtable to celebrate and support the European Week against Cancer. The Roundtable was held in the European Parliament on 6 June 2012.

The Roundtable focused on the need for a multi-pronged European cervical cancer prevention strategy that includes screening as well as vaccination and reaches out to women, including disadvantaged and hard to reach groups. Cervical cancer is a prominent example of existing health inequalities as not all women across the EU 27 are benefitting from best practice of cervical cancer prevention.
